ABOUT THE FDP
Business research and data analysis have become important for academicians, researchers, corporate executives as well as for the management students in enhancing their decision making skills. In today's digitalized world, knowledge of business related research and data analysis are important. Data analytics has become the key to gathering data, process it and to communicate the findings as meaningful information to the various stakeholders.

In order to overcome any limitations an individual may have in data analysis, we have recourse to application software packages that assist in data validation, provide graphical representation and analysis, and assist in choosing an appropriate statistical analysis. Crisp conclusions could be inferred from a properly executed statistical procedure. SPSS statistics is one such software package used for logical batched and non-batched statistical analysis. This software is one of the most popular statistical packages which can perform highly complex data manipulation and analysis with simple instructions.

This program is intended to help the faculty members, researchers, and the corporate executives to enhance their elementary understanding of statistical data analysis starting from data preparation to data presentation in a professional manner.

COVERAGE
• An understanding on the basic nature of data
• Data preparation and selection of an appropriate statistical technique with SPSS
